What a colossal work it was! And yet I was assured the other day that in England it seems already half-forgotten. Can that be possible? Is it really necessary to preface this sonnet-sequence by glancing at it? Twenty-five years before he made the will whose provisions were the subject of Lord Rosebery's speech, Rhodes when he was a mere boy drew up a will in his own hand-writing which opens with these words: I contend that the British race is the finest that history has yet produced. And in this belief - in the belief that it would be good for the world for the finest race to dominate it - he worked during all his life.
