Not illustrated. 1793 Excerpt: . . . as vain and doubtful tokens of capacity and learning; while, more jeafcos to be learned than to appear so, he disdained to take the honorary degrees. His mind had infinite pleasure in the study of the mathematics, and his heart found ever)-wish happily gratified in the amiable society of Mr. Weigel. That gentleman had a design of composing a course of morality, to be handled aster the manner of the geometricians. The esteem he had for Puffendorff induced him to communicate his scheme to him; and our philosopher entered so well into the principles of morality, that Mr. Weigel thought him rcore fitted than himself to execute it. Accordingly he gave him his manuscript, and permitted him to make what use of it he judged proper. Every thing attached our author ts his professor; the lessons he received from him, the sweetness of hii conversation, and his assiduous politeness. But he was afraid of abating his favours by remaining any longer in his house; he had already been there a year, which was too long, in his opinion, for a mao incapable of acknowledging th services he had done him: he left him, therefore, aud returned to Leiplic. Whi. e uncertain there how to proceed in order to lay the foundation of a moderate fortune, he received a letter from his brother, howsj in the srrvice of the king of Sweden, advising him not to lose his time in his own country, but to seek to...
